

Steve Gander

geb. in London, lebt in Wien

Ausbildungen

Was born in London where he spent some time growing up (a process that some say is still not completed) before studying English and American literature and embarking on a series of jobs designed to get him to the bottom of the career ladder and keep him there. He has been a cook in a mental hospital ("You'd have to be mad to eat my food"), a tourist guide taking Americans to Russia ("I got positive feedback"), a sound engineer in Italy ("I just got feedback") as well as a couple of other things too interesting to mention here.

Diverses

He has spent most of the last twenty years in Vienna but also lived in England for four years during the 90s. In Vienna he began teaching English as a foreign language ("though I always thought I should teach it as English"), and also works as a translator. His fascination with language led him to write the "English as a Funny Language" show which has made regular appearances over the last four years. His second show is "Name: God; Occupation: Comedian". He is also an active musician and the comedy shows also contain some funny original songs such as "Copulate and Populate" and "The Viking Rape and Pillage and Booze Blues". He regularly plays live and is currently working on a new CD with his band "Steve Gander & the Dangers of..."
